

Amy Weiss, founder and CEO of Weiss Public Affairs, has successfully worked at the highest levels of government, campaigns and in the corporate and non-profit sectors during her career in strategic communications, including serving in the White House as Deputy Assistant to the President/Deputy Press Secretary to President Bill Clinton.

Prior to launching Weiss Public Affairs in 2013, Weiss co-founded Point Blank Public Affairs in January 2006. Her current long-time, blue chip clients include: Mars, Incorporated; the NFL Physicians Society (NFLPS); acclaimed lawyer Kenneth R. Feinberg; Sony Music Entertainment, law firms and litigants, among many others.

Previously, Weiss was the Vice President of Public Affairs for Ted Turner's philanthropy the United Nations Foundation and Executive Director of its lobbying arm, the Better World Campaign.

She was the Senior Vice President of Communications for the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) for over five years, and prior to that position, was Director of Public Affairs at the international firm Burson-Marsteller, working for clients such as American Airlines, PBS, and other Fortune 500 companies.

Weiss worked for U.S. Rep. Mike Synar (D-OK) as his Campaign Manager and congressional Press Secretary.

At the Democratic National Committee (DNC), Weiss was Communications Director in 1997 after serving as the Press Secretary in 1996.

She was the Oregon state Press Secretary for the 1992 Clinton/Gore campaign.

Weiss served as Communications Director at the Center for National Policy for five years (from 1988-1992), working for then-Presidents L. Kirk O'Donnell and Madeleine K. Albright and Chairman Edmund S. Muskie.

She is on the Board of Trustees and on the Executive Committee serving as Communications Chair for the National Museum for Women in Arts. She also serves on the American University's School of Communications' Dean's Council. Weiss provides pro bono work for the Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law.

Weiss, who lives in Washington, D.C., is a graduate of American University and studied at Birkbeck College in London, UK. She was named "Camper of the Year" at Indian Springs Camp in 1978.